The Dachau Artists' Path

Towards the end of the 19th century Dachau held a special fascination for landscape painters.

They had a significant impact on the life in town, esteeming and preserving the customs of the region, seeking to conserve architecturally attractive features of the locality and to protect the unique natural environment.

By 1900 Dachau had become a centre of plein-air landscape painting known far beyond the boundaries of the area. The Dachau artists' colony had achieved a high reputation nationwide. Three painters were largely responsible for this development: Adolf Hölzl, Ludwig Dill and Arthur Langhammer.

Discover these and other painters of the former Dachau artists' colony on this circular tour. Permanent displays hold paintings, marking the locations where the painters once stood to look at their motives.
